DEFENSE WITNESS

THE train came racing up out of the tube toward Andy, like some weird story-book creature with two red eyes blinking over a gaping yellow maw. It swayed and rattled to a halt, its doors gliding open with a warning hiss to admit a tide of overcoated men and women. Then the tide was going in, carrying Andy along with it. Again the train was jolting and swaying on its way.

Now that the big moment was almost at hand, Andy began restlessly to think about the past four days. It was now or never. If the Navy didn't take over, he'd just about be able to make it home.

Wind blasted into his face as he turned along the street. Funny but it hadn't seemed as bad as that out on the farm. Then he stepped into the building, a towering thing that seemed to top high up into the snow flurries and the wind. Andy quickly stepped forward. Right inside stood a sailor, an oak billy swinging from a thong around his fingers, a gun in a holster on his hip.

"I want to enlist," Andy blurted, pausing before the sailor. "Can you tell me where—"

The sailor pointed with the club. "Right over there to that desk. They'll take care of everything . . . sailor."

Andy grinned. He liked being called sailor. If only . . .

He found his way to the desk, from which they sent him into an office down a corridor a way. The man behind the desk made himself small in the chair, and the hat around his temple was graying.

Andy said, "I want to enlist. I want to get into the navy—"

"What?" The man leaned back, smiling up. "That's fine. But . . . not so fast. Sit down, young fellow."

Andy sat down, wishing he'd been called sailor rather than young fellow. "Bring your birth certificate with you!"

Andy left his heart contracted. He'd expected this and all the way he'd been working out a line of answers. They'd sounded very convincing then. Now . . . "I—I haven't got it," he admitted, the words just barely getting past the queer lump in his throat. "But it's all right. I—I'm old enough. I'm as big as any of the sailors I've seen. I'm strong. I've been doing farm work—"

The man laughed gently. "You aren't of age, are you?"

For a second Andy hesitated, feeling his heart reduced to a labored throb. "No-o. I—I'm not. I'm almost—"

The man shook his head. "We'd like to have you, son. We want you. But you've got to have your parents' consent. We can't accept you without that. It's the law."

"The law?" Andy said bitterly. "I might not have had any parents. I might be an orphan. Maybe I was born where—where there weren't any records! It's happened!"

"Then we would investigate. Under those circumstances we might be able to do something for you."

"I can't go back," Andy pleaded doggedly. "Don't you understand? I've got to join the Navy. I've got to get out with the rest of the fellows. There are millions of them and they're doing it all. I'm not scared. I can take it!"

"Of course you can." Tell you what. Go back home and get your parents' consent. I'm sure they will understand if you talk it over with them carefully. Come back to me and I'll see if it you get into the Navy. How's that?"

HOW was it? Andy gripped his bag tightly, turning along the street. It was growing dark now and snow was coming down softly, hushing the sound of people's feet, touching his face with soft, damp fingers.

Later he found himself down near the docks. His interest quickened and he hurried ahead turning down a street that led along the wharves. He could see freighters tied up, lights gleaming at their sides. A tug puffed alongside one, steam rising above her stack like a white umbrella. The swell of the river was strong and resistant to the sea, of pulling coaches and the tug of the wind.

But this was as near as he could come to it.

This and no nearer. He'd never be back, because they wouldn't let him. He knew it with a fixed certainty that hurt the back of his mind and he turned away and went on back the way he had come, found his way into the subway and to the station. Three days and two nights. He counted the money he had left. It would be just enough.

BACK home, Dad didn't seem much interested in the paper after supper and Mom had that trembly look around her mouth. Andy crawled out on the sofa, watching the flames in the fireplace, listening to the low song of the wind about the house.

Dad finally folded the paper. "How was the day, son?"

Andy steeled himself. "It was okay. What I saw of it. I was more interested in—" He hesitated, looking quickly at Mom.

"More interested in the Navy?" Dad suggested.

"That's right. You don't seem to understand how important it is. I'm big, strong. There's nothing to keep me here."

"Nothing?"

Andy hesitated, that funny, knobby lump in his throat. Again he looked at Mom, who was busy with a sweater she was knitting. "Well, just you and Mom. Oh, I don't mean that I won't care. I do. It's simply that I want to go. Look at the papers. There are guys who have been over on the other side and in battles, who were younger than I. How many more do you think there are who haven't been found out?"

Dad didn't answer that one. Mom's needles clicked softly for a while. Andy said, "I'll be old enough before long anyhow. I'll go, then. You know I will. You know it's right."

"No," Mom's voice was sharp. "You're not going. I won't have it—"

The knocker on the front door tapped a command, and Andy got up quickly and left the room. He opened the door, admitting a gust of wind and snow and a bundled-up figure.

For a second Andy stared. "Chris Turner?" he gasped. "Back from the army? Or furlough?"

Chris' smile looked bright and healthy but as they moved along the hall, Andy noted his slight limp. Chris said, "I'm discharged."

Mom and Dad greeted him and Andy knew Mom's smile was one of those put-on kind, the sort that doesn't come naturally but by sheer force.

"When'd you get back, Chris?" Andy asked. "Wonder you wouldn't let a guy know."

"I've only been here a couple of days," Chris explained, sitting down in front of the blazing fire. "Lobby had outside. Figured if I didn't get over tonight, I might not be able to till later."

Tensely Andy asked, "What happened, Chris? Over there—?"

"Andy!" Mom's voice was sharp.

But Chris laughed. "Plenty happened. Oh, I don't mind talking about it. It wasn't that bad. I'm sorry I'm out. I'll be all right in a while and maybe I'll be able to get back in again."

"You—you'd do that? Again?"

"Why not? It was all right. Oh, the army's tough. Any branch of the service is. But you get used to that." For a couple of minutes Chris didn't say anything, but sat there watching the fire. He said simply, "It's something that's got to be done. When you figure they'll come over here and get us if we don't get them first, you know it's got to be done."

"I know," Andy said softly. "I've been saying that a long time. There are plenty of guys who have been in and are coming out. Somebody's got to take their place."

The fire was getting low and the patter of snow against the windows was sharpening. Chris finally got up to go and Andy slid into his overcoat and walked back with him.

"I'm trying to get in," Andy admitted. "I couldn't make them see it my way. Maybe they'll think differently after what you've told them tonight."

"Out here . . . it's like there wasn't a war. In winter you don't even get the paper half the time. People don't realize what we're up against. But tonight . . . with you there to tell 'em—"

Chris chuckled. "You'll like the army. Or the navy. Either one. There'll be a lot of fun. Let me know how you make out."

SOFTLY Andy walked back through the falling snow, watching the intermittent lights of the houses along the way. Bright lights which were shining now and would always be shining. But only through the strength and courage of the men over there. And he had to be one of them. He had to be.

Near the house someone moved toward him. Dad said, "Still want to go in, I guess?"

"Sure. If you and Mom—"

"It had to be settled one way or the other," Dad admitted. "That's why I asked Chris over after supper. To convince you one way or the other. You and your mother."

"I'm convinced," Andy said softly. "Convinced I still want to go in."

CAPTAIN AMERICA

MURDER BRAIN

HORROR KNOW NO BOUNDS WHEN A KNOWLEDGE HUNGRY SCIENTIST KEPT ALIVE THE BRAIN OF AN EXECUTED MURDERER WHOSE LIFE HAD BEEN AN ENDLESS POUND OF TERROR AND DESTRUCTION.

FOR FROM BEYOND THE VEIL GRABED ITSELF THE ONE TIME OWNER OF THE BRAIN CONTINUED HIS CRIMINAL REIGN OF HATRED... AND TURNED AN INNOCENT MAN INTO A MONSTER. SHALL WONDER THAT CAPTAIN AMERICA AND BUCKY FOUND THEMSELVES BATTLED AS THEY CAME FACE TO FACE WITH A FEND WHO WAS NOT THE MASTER OF HIS OWN WILL... AND THEY KNEW THAT HE RECKONED THEM TO DOOM.

ARMED AMERICA AND BUCKY ACT ON AN ACCIDENTAL PIECE OF INFORMATION.

LUCKY YOU GOT HOLD OF THAT TOOL. BEEN AWE OF HIS AND MADE HIM TALK, CAP?

I HAD AN IDEA TISER DUNCAN WOULD MAKE AT LEAST ONE ATTEMPT TO ESCAPE BEFORE HE WENT TO THE CHAIR.

EVERYTHING SEEMS QUIET ENOUGH!

MAYBE DUNCAN CHANGED HIS MIND!

SUDDENLY, THE STILLNESS OF THE NIGHT IS SHATTERED BY THE CRASH OF GUN FIRE AND THE WHIRL OF SIRENS.

HOW DVA LIKE THAT? I TOLD YA TISER DUNCAN WAST THROUGH KILLIN.

GO ON NEE!

CAP! IT'S DUNCAN!

THIS IS MY OPPORTUNITY FOR THAT EXPERIMENT IN KEEPING A BRAIN ALIVE!
AN UNHARMED SPECIMEN, AND NOBODY WILL MIND IF I TAKE IT!

BUT IT'S THE BRAIN OF A DANGEROUS KILLER!
MAYBE IT BETTER NOT!
MAYBE I OUGHT TO LET
ALL OF HIM DIE!

BUT AS THE DOCTOR
PONDERS, A STRANGE
FEELING SWEPTS OVER
HIM AND HE ACTS
ALMOST AGAINST HIS WILL!!

THAT'S FUNNY!
SEEMS AS IF I'M BEING COMMAND-ED TO REMOVE THE BRAIN!

REMOVE MY BRAIN!
KEEP IT ALIVE!

YES! I HAVE THE FEELING THAT A WILL STRONGER THAN MINE IS INSIST-
ING ON IT!

THE CHEMICALS
ARE FEEDING IT!
THE BRAIN
LIVES!

THERE! NOW I'LL TAKE IT TO MY PRIVATE LABORATORY AND KEEP IT ALIVE! THIS OUGHT TO PROVE MOST INTERESTING!

THOUGHT HEAVY!
I FEEL THEM AGAIN!
THE BRAIN IS SEND-ING ME A MESSAGE!
I MUST CONCENTRATE!
I MUST UNDER-STAND!

SLUGGED HIM?
WHO ARE YOU

I'M NOT SURE MR. DISTRICT

WHY I'M

TO RUN YOU OUT!

NO!
WHY SHOULD YOU WANT

STEVE AND BUCKY READ
THE STRANGE NEWS...

BUT THAT'S IMPOSSIBLE!

RIGHT?

A

BUT THAT RULES OUT THE POSSIBILITY THAT IT WAS DUNCAN. THERE HE IS, STIFF AND DEAD!

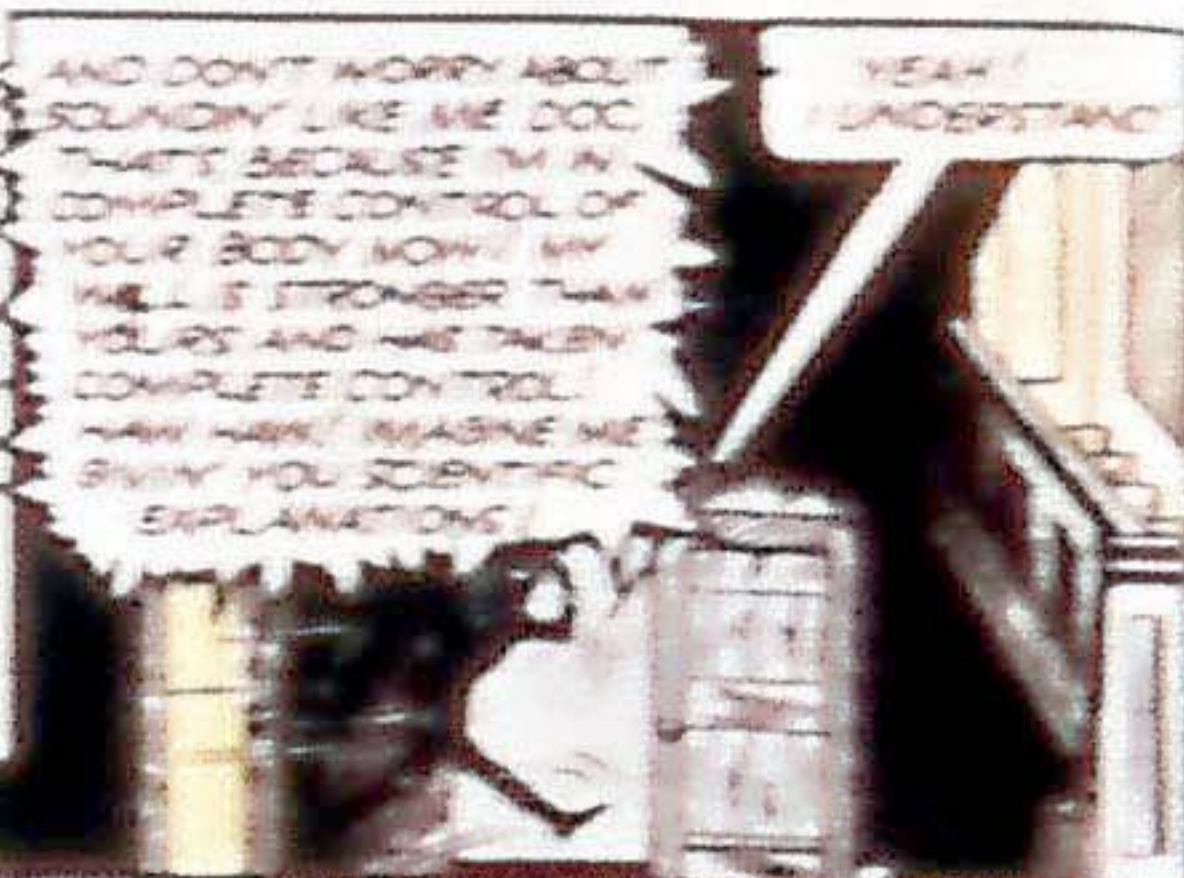

AND YET IT WAS HIS VOICE I HEARD!

AT THAT MOMENT...

NOW FOR THE JUDGE DOC... THIS TIME WE'LL DO IT WITH A ROPE. USING THE SAME METHOD EVERY TIME MAKES MURDER MONOTONOUS!

WILL GO AT ONCE!

AND DON'T WORRY ABOUT SOUNDING LIKE ME DOC. THAT'S BECAUSE I'M IN COMPLETE CONTROL OF YOUR BODY NOW! MY WILL IS STRONGER THAN YOURS AND HAS TAKEN COMPLETE CONTROL. HAH HAH! IMAGINE ME GIVING YOU SCIENTIFIC EXPLANATIONS!

THE LIKE DUNCAN.

AS SOON AS

SOME QUESTIONS.

BUT AS CONSCIOUSNESS RETURNS TO THE DOCTOR.

TRAPPED BY
